The Losers

odgers' Locker Room Hardly Shangri-La

ikland Oct. 17.—Here are the words and feelings of a baseam down to its lest World Series gasp:
"We'll just have to watch the highlight films now," Bill er said. "We might throw up if we watch enough of these

"Not now." said Andy Messersmith, walking away from a r, which was a tactful way of saying, "Leave me alone." I thought he was out," funed Steve Yeager, replaying the

"This was just like the other games," Steve Garvey said. In the tape again and just change the score."

They've got a team that gets the most out of so little of any "ve ever seen," Joe Ferguson said, trying to be complimentary

d so it went last night in the wake of a 5-2 defeat. loser's locker room is hardly a shangri-is. Hopes die hard, as are mostly suppressed, but perfectly clear. Words are as players rehash how it might have been or how they hope be. Nobody is burying the Dodgers yet, but their clubhouse mood was one of a team with everything but an obituary.

They exuded a potpourri of feelings after losing game No. 4 to Ken Holtzman and Rollie Fingers and Jim Holt and a Gloveman named Dick

There was the usual run of anger and despair in the Dodger camp. But along with it was a touch of dry humor and homespun philosophy about their place in baseball's biggest extrav-

"I thought he [Reggie Jackson] alid away from the plate and his left leg slid up my leg," grumbled Yeager, picking at a paper plate of ravioli as he replayed a sixthinning slide into home plate. He looked up at a reporter and ssked: "What did you think?" The reporter told Yeager he thought he had the plate block-ed, but his tag was late.

er shrukeed. Well, said, "his body mark [on the dirti was three feet away, so unless he's got a six-foot leg. I say he was out. I called the umpire a lier. Big deal!"

Actually, the play had no bearing on the game's outcome. Jackson had beaten Ferguson's throw and followed Sal Bando to the plate on pinch-hitter Holt's two-run single that made it 4-2. Had Jackson not scored on the play, the A's would have won by the now familiar score of 3-2.

The Dodgers' biggest hope tonight will be 19-game winner Don Sutton, who hasn't lost since mid-August. The right-hander was trying to kindle the Dodgers' optimism, even as he left the Oakland Collseum to ride the train back to San Fran-

"All I know," Sutton said, "is that a World Series is never over until somebody has the money and says to one team, This is your winner's share,' and to the This is your loser's

Oakland a Game Away From Baseball's Top Prize

By Joseph Durso

OAKLAND, Oct 17 (NYT).-California's first World Series threatened to be a short one last night when the Oakland A's over-powered the Los Angeles Dod-gers, 5-2, and moved to within a game of their third straight championship.

Ken Holtzman, the pitcher, who had not been to bat all season, gave the A's the lead by hitting a home run in the third iming off a 20-game winner, Andy Messersmith of the Dodg-ers. Then, after Los Angeles ers. Then, after Los Angeles had gone ahead, the A's cranked up a four-run rally in the sixth

They now hold a lead of three League champions, one short of the top honor in beseball and the top honor in beseball and $25,000 a man. They will go for both tonight, with Vida Blue pitching for Oakland and Don Sutton trying to stave off doomsday for Los Angeles.

For those who were expecting fireworks or flair from the West Coast's first intercity series, the rowdy A's were providing their customary flow of family fights and fends behind the scenes. Jim (Catish) Hunter, their heet pitcher, was still declaring his inpitcher, was still declaring his independence from any contract commitment as of next week. The local fans were spring to keep the team from leaving Oak-land. And Charles Finley, the heavy-handed owner and general manager of the club, was insist-ing that neither action was nec-essary, although both were aimed

And the teams supplied some flair in game No. 4 of the 71st series, starting with Holtzman's home run with one down in the third inning. He hit it after Messersmith had thrown one ball and two etrikes, and it was no "chespie"—a rising line drive that cleared the leftfield fence and landed in the seats 375 feet from home plate. He had hit only two home runs in his 10-year career, both in the National League with the Chicago Cubs -one in 1969 and the other in 1971. Then, in last year's World Series against the New York Mets, he hit a pair of doubles, And last Saturday against the Dodgers, he walked, doubled and scored on a squeeze bunt. So when he uncorked his home run off Messersmith, he circled the bases with glittering statis-tics: Three doubles and a home run in his last five times at bat in World Series play.

But if Holizman provided the lead with his bat, he promptly lost it with his arm. When the Dodgers went to the plate half an inning later, they got two runs and took the lead.

Steve Garvey started it with a single to rightfield with one down and Joe Ferrison walked. . For a moment, Holizman protected himself by striking out Ron Cey. But then Bill Russell hit a triple into right-center that found just enough airspace between Bill North and Reggie Jackson, and two Dodgers scored for a 2-1 lead.

It was Messersmith's turn to protect the lead, and he did it for two innings. But in the bottom of the sixth, he walked two batters unintentionally and walked another intentionally. He made a wild pickoff throw to first base and was stung by two singles to rightfield for a total of four runs. It all began with a walk to North, who now represented the tying run at first base. So Messersmith threw over three times to keep North honest, but next bounced a throw past Garvey, and North would up on second

Sal Bando, with no hits in 11 times at bat in the series, followed with a looping single be-hind first base and the Dodgers' lead disappeared. Then Jackson

Finley Pep Talk Falls On Contemptuous Ears

By Leonard Koppett

OAKLAND, Calif., Oct. 17 (NYT).—A lineup change, a player traumatic reaction to it, and an owner's inspirational speech were the main topics among the Oakland A's last night after their 5-2 victor

The change involved putting Claudell Washington, a leithonde batter, in the lineup against Andy Messersmith, the righthander wh was beaten hut not hit hard by the A's in the first game. That mean putting Washington in leftfield, moving Joe Rudi to first base an benching Gene Tenace.

The shattered player was Tennee, a home-run hero as a catche in the 1972 World Series, a .158 hitter as a catcher and first baseman in last year's World Series, and the regular first baseman of the A most of this season, except when he was forced to catch hecause injuries to others. And the pentalk, called by Charles Finley a few minutes befor the game, consisted of a reading of a local newspaper clipping quot ing various Dodgers down-grading the Oakland team.

"What did you get out of the pep talk?" someone asked Sa Bando, the team captain, "Five minutes of rest," Bando said. "Cllp pings," Reggie Jackson said contemptuously. "I can't go out ther and play on clippings. They're a good team and they haven't played yet the way they can. I know how tough they're going to be."

If Finley didn't make an impression with his pep talk, he made a hig one with his role in the decision to bench Tenace.

According to manager Alvin Dark, the idea has been in the wind since Sunday night, after righthanded Don Sutton,

"We just haven't been scoring at all, and we thought we should have another lefthanded batter on Wednesday and Thursday," Dark explained. "We knew we weren't going to do it Tuesday because Al Downing was a lefthanded starter. We even talked about using Jim Holt." But the lineup that took batting practice had Tenace in It. Then he found out from Dal Maxvill "I went to see Dark, and got no satisfaction. He said Finley told him that he'd had his way last time, and that Finley was going to have his way this time." The reference to last time, apparently, was to the eve of the American League playoff, when Finley wanted Tenace to catch Rudi to play first and Angel Mangual to be the designated hitter so that Ray Fosse, the regular catcher hut a weak hitter all season, could be bypassed. The A's wound up using their regular alignment with Fosse catching, as he was last night. Dark insisted, however, it wasn't a last-minute change at all. "I never have a final lineup until I talk it over with Mr. Finley and my coaches, but the idea of using Washington was in our minds before." Didn't that weaken two positions defensively, leftfield and first hase?

History That Was Stored For 30 Years in a Suitcase

By Jack Monet

DARIS, Oct. 17 (IHT).—Lucien Aigner, a prominent photojournalist in Europe during the 1930s, long ago gave up the hectic life of covering international political meetings. But, at 73. he has found a new vocation in nurturing his collection of more than 100,000 negatives. A youthful, melancholy Haile Selassie arriving in Geneva in 1936 for his League of Nations address, Mussolini tugging at his nose, Einstein in Europe and at Princeton, Gandhi, the American politicians Florella LaGuardia and Jimmy Walker, Churchill, Chaliapin and Marlene Dietrich—a few of the notables in his collection.

For 30 years, the unique assemblage of images remained untouched in a suitcase that Mr. Aigner left behind in Paris in 1939 when he went to the United States. It was almost thrown away when the Germans occupied his apartment. His brother took the suitcase to southern France and managed to safeguard it while participating in the Resistance. When the suitcase arrived in the United States after the war, Mr. Aigner put it aside in his darkroom, promising himself for 20 years "to do something there. As satisfying as the expositions are, Mr. Aigner is uneasy about the future of the collection. He is seeking an institution interested in housing the vast visual archive, and funds to catalogue the negatives, for which only his memory provide the captions.

A Camera

It was Mr. Aigner's good fortune to be active when the Leica was brought out. He and his contemporaries, Alfred Eisenstadt, Robert Capa and Henri Cartier-Bresson, pioneered in making the most of the handheld 35-mm camera for informal, unposed shots that revolutionized photojournalism. Ironically, Mr. Aigner got his first Leics from an American photojournalist, James Abbe, who could not get used to it and preferred his 8 x- 10 camera. which required a tripod.

But Mr. Aigner started out as a journalist and still believes in the use of text to even the effect of "grab shots."

"I don't believe in that old saw about one picture being worth a thousand words," he said. "One picture can lie. A picture gives you the impact, but it needs words, interpretation to

Richard Burton Plans PEOPLE: To Marry a Princess

Actor Richard Burton, 48, said Thursday night that he plans to marry Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia 38, "as soon as it is practically possible." He made the announcement outside his home in the London suburb of Hampstead, with the princess and one of her three children by previous marriages at his side. Reports of the romance were published Thursday by two British papers, four months after Burton's divorce from actress Elizabeth Tay-

Princess Elizabeth is married to Neil Balfour, 30, a banker who was defeated as a Conservative candidate in the general elections last Thursday. The chairman of the local Conservative party organisation in the West London constituency where Ballour ran said "It appears that Mr. Baltour was informed about the involvement of his wife with Richard Burton last Friday."

Princess Elizabeth is a first cousin of Britain's Princess Alexandra and a second cousin to the Queen's children. She has a 4year-old son by Balfour and two daughters, 12 and 11, by an earlier marriage to New York clothing tycoon Howard Oxenberg. She and Burton were in Paris last weekend so that he could meet her parents, Prince and Princess Paul of Yugoslavia

An official Chinese spokesman Thursday described a report in a British newspaper that Mao Tsetung had had a severe stroke as "out-and-out rumor mongering" The report in Monday's Daily Telegraph, quoted Western businessmen as saying that the 80-year-old Chinese leader had the stroke last month and that his political life had been brought virtually to an end. When queried by Jonathan Sharp of Reuters on what the Telegraph said, tha spokesman replied after a threeday delay with the 'rumor mongering" comment. Mso has not appeared in public for three and a half years but he has continued to receive foreign heads of state as well as other visitors regarded with special favor by the Chi-

The Finnish government has saked the post office to reconside: its decision not to handle number for Santa Claus this year, Two weeks ago, the post office announced that because of a numpower shortage it would be unable to answer the expected thuilsands of letters from all over the world—Santa is said to live on Korvatunturi Mountain in Fillnish Lapland. But Traffic Minister Pekka Tarjanne, whose ministry controls the post office, wrote to postal authorities Wedneeday asking for reconsideration. pointing eut that the matter should be considered in a wider context-tourism knowledge Finland as well as from the poult of view of children.

Also from Helsinki comes word that Soviet President Nikolai Padgorny shot an elk Thursday while hunting with Finnish President Urho Kekkonen . Podgorny then flew back to Moscow, ending in-four-day official visit.

BACK HOME—President Ford walks on White House lawn with his wife Betty after she was discharged from Bethesda Naval Medical Center following surgery.

Mrs. Ford Recovering Well; Plans to Make Japan Trip

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13 (AP).—First Lady Betty Ford is back home with her family and recovering so well from surgery for breast cancer that she plans to go to Japan with the President next month.

Meanwhile, however, a White House spokesman said Mrs. Ford's schedule would be restricted for three or four weeks. Mrs. Ford was released from Bethesda Naval Medical Center Friday afternoon, 13 days after she underwent a radical mastec-tomy for removal of her right breast, some chest muscles and lymph nodes from the underside of her right arm.

Her recovery bas been described by doctors as excellent. They reported that she gained 2 1/2 pounds in the past week and has resumed use of her right arm.

Looks Super

The White House physician, Dr. William Lukesh, accompanying Mrs. Ford home, told the President: "She looks super."

Mrs. Ford gaily waved her right arm at a crowd outside the hospital as she came smiling home. As she stepped from a helicopter onto the White House lawn, she was greeted with a hug and kisses by her daughter, Susan

On hand to welcome her were about 150 staff members, who cheered and applauded. The new family dog, acquired in her absence, was there too. When Mrs. Ford knelt down to greet the golden retriever, named Liberty, the dog responded by licking her face.

"I didn't know I was going to have a baby waiting for me when I came home," she said as she looked over the eight-month-old pup.

Mrs. Ford also jokingly childed her husband because "he didn't notice my new dress." The President retorted that "I'll notice it when the bill comes."

Arthur Garrity, ruling last June on a long-standing suit brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, ordered the plan put into effect. He found that the School Committee had festered segregation by such devices as "tracking" black and white neighborhood schools into either threeyear of four-year high schools.

The plan was drawn up by state education authorities after the School Committee failed to draw up its own plan or provide information.

At the time, Judge Garrity conceded that he had not read the state plan. Many of those most actively involved now in trying to implement it describe it as "terrible."

But many black parents have simply been afraid to send their children into hostile South Boston, where the buses have been met with stones and jeers, and where the black attendance has been low. Even in the Roxbury building of the high school, tha black attendance has been about half of that expected, or less.

Many of the meetings that Mayor Kevin White and other city officials have held with black parents and leaders have been marked by cries of fear for the safety of the children and demands for protection.

Mr. Ford had been accused by Mayor White of baving "encouraged false hopes and fanned the flames of resistance that will almost inevitably lead to further disruption in Boston." He also criticized Mr. Ford's refusal to send federal marshals to protect schoolchildren.

Boston officials hoped that the three-day Columbus Day weekend would help cool tempers. The mayor's office said there was no trouble yesterday. On Friday, for the first time in several days, there were no arrests in connection with the busing. Chasses were reported quiet and, although still far below normal, attendance was up slightly.

The text of the letter, which Mr. Rockefeller sent to Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev., was a reply to a request by Sen. Cannon for ad-ditional information concerning gifts listed in the gift tax returns Mr. Rockefeller had earlier made available to the committee. Mr, Rockefeller said in his letter, reeased Friday:

"Throughout my life, I have made loans and gifts to friends and associates to assist them in meeting the kind of pressing himan needs which all people have from time to time-problems such as severe illness and medical expenses, marital problems, edoca-tion of children, problems of adolescents, problems of reloca-tion, problems of meeting one's obligations to sged parents and problems that have to be faced after retirement

"In many cases there were special human circumstances that dictated urgency of action, and I responded simply out of friendship and affection.

Mr. Rockefeller also said of the gifts to the 18 past or present public officials and staff members that all of them had been appointed by him and that all sible" to him. He went on to say: "We had identical objectives, there was no conflict of interest i polyed and there was nothing filegal or immoral about either the loans or the gifts.

"Unfortunately, confidential information submitted to the committees and to the executive branch weeks ago has in some unauthorized or improper way been leaked piecemeal to the press, causing the compromising of the privacy of many individuals and misleading interpretations of the facts which I made available confidentially to the committee many weeks ago."

Meanwhile, Paul Beck, who sold a California newspaper, the Oceanside Blade-Tribune, in 1954, to a Washington columnist, said yesterday that Mr. Rockefeller provided the $125,000 down payment with the apparent understanding that his backing would not be publicly disclosed. Mr. Rockefeller later confirmed the

A plainclothes policeman searches two of three men who surrendered after taking over a radio station in Montgomery, Ala., and calling for a black revolution.

3 Gunmen Seize Alabama Radio Station

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 13 (AP).—Three black gumman took over radio station WAPX yesterday in a hail of gunfire that left a white security guard dead. Pleading on the air for a "black revolution," they sur-rendered after their last hostage

The city police chief said two other blacks are being sought in the bizarre series of events that began when a 78-year-old white man, Aldron Parham, was hacked in the face with a machete and ended with the take-over of the soul-music

Police Chief Ed Wright said the five were black militants who "had boasted that they were going to kill police officers and make a grandstand play in Montgomery. He said the men gave Black Muslim names.

The trio in the bullet-riddled radio station in downtown Montgomery had at one point cried over the air: "There'e a Negro revolution and a black revolution. I'm in the black revolution. We want all you niggers to come on down."

Mr. Wright said that the elderly white man was attacked without provocation and that the five then fled in a car.

Police pursued it, rammed it, and the five began running, he

Mr. Wright said two escaped and the three others, armed with sawed-off shotguns, took over the radio station in a burst of gunfire that killed a guard, M.E. Furr.

The take-over ended after two hours of stalemate when a black disc jockey, Alphonso Dixon, scrambled to freedom. Police said the gummen had told Mr. Dixon to go to the door and hold up a mirror so they could watch the police. When he reached the door, he burst through it to safety.

Nixon Altered U.S. Policy in Southern Africa

By Murrey Marder

WASHINGTON, Oct 13 (WP) The Nixon White House in 1970 secretly endorsed the "selective relaxation" of U.S. policy toward. southern Africa's white-ruled regimes during the explosive black independence drive, according to newly disclosed information.

An unprecedented inside look at how Nixon administration strategists grappled with the conflicting goals of U.S. economicstrategic interests versus African self-determination has now become available. The basic secret report, known as National Security Study Memorandum 29, (NSSM 39) was never intended for public use.

On Friday, the State Department officially declined to discuss the report, prepared under the direction of Secretary, of State Henry Kissinger, when he still had only the single job of being presidential national security adviser. But no matter what the report recommended or what the White House did about it, the State Department insisted, there was no "tilt" of American policy toward African white-supremacy

Less officially State Department sources are making a more sophisticated attempt to dispel the "tilt" charge, out of concern over the consequences that it may have in the United States and

Despite the conservative, probusiness attitude in the Nixon White House, these sources contend, "there was little change" that actually took place from the pro-self-determination policy toward Africa first set by the Kennedy administration.

'Credit to Us' "Where did this [tilt] occur?" a State Department official asked. "I think the proof is hard to find. I think it is a credit to us that we were able to maintain the policies that existed for a decade basically intact." Others argue that with the escalating sweep of the black independence drive in Africa in recent years, any retrogression of U.S. support for it, or even holding to a stand-pat position, amounted to "tilting" backward. The charges of U.S. "tilt" toward the minority white regimes of Africa were aired last week by syndicated columnist Jack Anderson and by Washington free-lance writer Tad Szulc, writing in the October issue of Esquire mag-

5 Policy Options

According .. to . several sources the recommendation for a "selec-tive relaxation" of U.S. policy toward southern Africa's white regimes was made by Mr. Kis-singer, primarily based on what was known as "Option Two" among five choices offered for a new policy.

The report is based on "the policy dilemma within the U.S. government" over what is described as "the inherent equivocation" in American policy.

Icm of how to protect American "economic, scientific and strategic interests" in Africa and yet maintain "political credibility" for declared U.S. policy, in a manner in which "the political costs will not be excessive." .

The policy choice made by the White House was reportedly based in considerable part on the fol-lowing premise from Option Two in the strategy review: "The whites are here to stay

[in southern Africa] and the only way that constructive change cancome about is through them. There is no hope for the blacks to gain the political rights they seek through violence, which will only lead to chaos and increased opportunities for the Communists.

"We can, by selective relaxa-tion of our stauce toward the white regimes, encourage some modification of their current racial and colonial policies and through more substantial eco-nomic assistance to the black states (2 total of about $5 million annually in technical assistance to the black states) help to draw the groups together and exert some influence on both for peaceful change,"

American policy in Africa, the report schnowledged, was con-fronted with objectives that are "conflicting and irreconcliable."

As cited, these objectives in-To improve "the U.S. standing to black Africa" and elsewhere in the world "on the racial issue" while seeking "to minimize the likelihood of escalation of violence. . . and the risk of U.S. in-

At the same time, the report said "U.S. direct investment in southern Africa, mainly in South Africa . . . yields a highly profitable return."

"Southern Africa is geographically important for the United States and its allies, particularly with the closing of the Sues Canal and the increased Soviet activity in the Indian Ocean," the report emphasized. South Africa, the report said, "hopes to use the mall but persistent Soviet naval presence in the Indian Ocean as a basis for some sort of collaboration with the U.S." for "it is eager to be included in Western de-

What NSSM 39 shows is that the Nixon administration sought means of covertly enhancing U.S. interests in white-ruled black Africa, without exposing itself to charges of "tacti acceptance of racism" that could jeopardise U.S. interests where black insurgency movements might end up in control.

The choices set out in the secret study included: Option One - "Closer association with the white regimes to protect and enhance our economic, strategic and scientific in-

Option Two-Broader association with both black and white states in an effort to encourage moderation in the white states' and "enlist cooperation of the black states in reducing tensions and violence. This included the premise that "constructive change can come only by acquiescence of the whites" and, therefore, "selective relaxation of our stance toward the white states" was advocated, with increased but very nominal economic aid to black

Combination of Suggestions The primary choice reportedly was made by President Mixon, on Mr. Kissinger's recommendation, and centered on Option Two. A State Department official maintained, however, that "no option was selected, per se," but rather a combination of suggestions, Option Two included such pro-posais as continuing the official U.S. embargo on arms shipments to South Africa and Portugal's territories, while quietly permitting "more liberal breatment" with sales of "dual purpose equipment" that could serve either military or civilian purpose This is the critical "gray area"

The press conference was an unmitigated plus for the President pelitically," said one Republican congressman who is close to him. He presented the surcharge in the best possible light. The only problem was that he had presented it in a bad light the day before and lost the edge he might have had with Congress. Fact Sheets

This congressman and others complained that the "fact sheets" distributed by the White House at the briefing on the surcharge had overstated its impact and its effect on most tarpayers. The White House issued new figures the next day—but only after the political damage had been done, The original error on the surcharge figures typifles the problem of disorganization that some think has become endenic in the Ford White House. Many aides regard this disorganization as potentially serious and one staffer notes that two recent speech texts were halted in mid-duplication because it was found that the President would have been saying something which inadvertently contradicted administration pol-

"The problem really arises from the fact that Jerry runs the place like a congressional office, which it isn't, and that people still want to drop in on him when they feel like it," said one aide. "There is no system, little administrative experience, no one really in charge." One side is hopeful that new chief of staff Donald Rumsfeld gradually will bring order out of the organization chaos. Mr. Rumsfeld is helped by the presence of Terry O'Donnell, a scheduler who performs the doorkeeper functions for Mr. Ford.

Gradually, despite the manifold that was dashed by the reaction to the Nixon pardon is returning to the Ford administration. And if Mr. Ford was largely responsible for the problems, he also is responsible for the restoration of good feelings, a restoration enhanced by widespread sympathy for him in the wake of his wife's operation for breast cancer.

THE SEVEN-PER-CENT SOLUTION By Nicholas Meyer. Dulton. 253 pp. $6.95.

and it is a malicious pleasure to see him brought low in "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution." In the last throes of his well-known cocaine addiction, he is reduced to paranoid delusions. Oysters are going to overrun the earth. Stripers are menacing him with "air guns" A "Napoleon of crime" is masterminding London's underworld. And Holmes is too far gone in his addiction even to condescend to Dr. Watson. Here is the snob who has al-ways asked me to hold a mass of "elementary" material in my head until he chose, like a triumphant Quiz Kid, to make sense of it. Reading his adventures is like carrying his golf clubs while he alone plays. There is very little for the reader to do but allow himself to be apostrophized, to follow Holmes as he unearths a clue that he refuses to share or, even worse, simply to watch him think, which he does with an unoblig-ingly inscrutable face.

Now Holmes comes to Watson in such sorry shape that the doctor is at last allowed some initiative. Hearing that there is a physician in Vienna who can treat addicts. Watson enlists the aid of Holmes's brother to spirit him there. The year is 1891, and the Viennese physician is none other than Sigmund Freud. Freud is pictured as living in a house that is "some kind of Viennese chocolate bread miniature, crammed with D--den knick-knacks of every description." On his face is an "expression of infinite sadness," as he sees in most of us criminal impulses worse than many that Holmes has to face.

In "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution," Nicholas Meyer has recanon in a rather convincing manner, I wouldn't imagine that this should be difficult for anyone steeped as he is in the immense body of imaginative specu-lation that has grown up around the legend of the world's most famous detective, yet when their talents, of course, on a case once Freud has cured Holmes. The "victim" is a young woman who has been stunned, or tortured, into apathy. Freud is stump-ed and Holmes, applying which would be called forensic lecliniques today, helps him out of his impasse.

We have already seen an cx ample of Freud's tactical skill. Insulted by a Junker snob at his tennis club. Freud coolly con-fronts the bully and is challenged to a duel. He accepts, pro-vided the duel is fought with tennis rackets. The bully is bigger, stronger, younger, but the astute Frend has noticed that he has no backhand. When be evploits this weakness, the bully becomes "hysierical" and loses.

With Freud reasoning from character and Holmes from circumstance, they address themselves to a mystery on which the lives of millions may depend. It concerns the widow and sole heir of Germany's largest munitions maker. She is a Quaker and, if she can, she will destroy Germany's war machine Holmes, of course, anticipates World War I by some 23 years,

Mr. Meyer has blended ingenuity and farce in just about the right proportions. There is a chase scene, in locomotives, in which Frend turns out to be a formidable-coal heaver. Though Holmes carries out the more familiar heroics, it is the appen!ingly self-deprecating Freud who emerges as the real hero, Holman is not only exposed as a man who can misquote Andrew Marvell's most famous line—he omits the "but" from "Had we but world ensugh and time"we also learn some unsavory facts about his life that help to explain his aversion to women and his choice of vocation.

Freud is not being treated very kindly these days by many of those whose work he made pos-sible. It is pleasant to see him cast in an effective role again and to see his small daughter, Anna, charming the misogynist Holmes, Perhaps in yoking together these two giants of "detection"-one working from inside and the other from outside-Mr. Meyer is making a sly statement about the foundation and evolution of psychoanalysis.

Try covering the East-West hands in the diagramed deal, and decide how you would plan the play in six spedes against the opening lead of the dismond ten. Perhaps you can improve on the play chosen by South, a player who has won several national titles in the last two years.

North-South should reach a small slam in spades, or perhaps diamonds. The standard auction shown is direct and sensible. South bids one club, Dearly always the right move when holding five cards in each black suit, and bids one spade after a one-heart response.

When North shows a good hand with a fourth-suit bid of two dismonds, South can show his distribution and extra strength with a jump to three spades. North can then jump to six spades, knowing that there is no problem about controls and that a grand slam is unlikely to be a sound proposition

When this hand was played in the semifinal of the Spingold knockout team championship in New York in July, the diamond ten was led against six spades. South won in his hand with the diamond king ruffed a club and cashed the spade ace. He then finessed the spade jack, losing to the oueen. .

With the cards as shown, it can be seen that the contract now fails. West can return a trump or shift to a heart, and South winds up one trick short: he can establish the fifth diamond in the dummy, but he cannot get back there to cash it.

In real life, all the suits broke evenly and the slam succeeded. But it is worth considering how the declarer should have played to give himself the maximum

South should reason that he is unlikely to succeed if both spades and diamonds break badly. However, he can guard against a fourone break in one suit if the other divides three-two. After winning the first trick with the diamond king, it is an error to ruff a club—the ruff may be a necessary entry to the dummy in some cir-

The right play is to cash the ace and king of spades immediately. If the suit breaks badly, he continues with the jack to drive out the queen, and will survive if the diamonds breakor if West had incantiously led the diamond ten from a four-card holding, since a marked finesse is available.

With the cards as shown, West can ruff the lead of the diamond queen at the fourth trick, but must then do something helpful, either by giving dummy a valu-able entry with a heart lead or by leading a club into the ace-kingjack.

And if West refuses to ruff, it does not help the defense. South establishes the fifth liamond will a ruff and is in control, since, there is still a trump in dummy to ruff a club and serve as a

Nixon Is Described as Having Severe Cash-Flow Problem

by Jack Nelson and Kenneth Reich

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif., Aug. - Former President Richard Nixon is described as having a severe cash-flow problem, but to have no intention of becoming a recluse, in the first public statements in recent days by his aides

Mr. Nixon's attorney for his personal financial affairs, Dean Butler of Los Angeles, told the Los Angeles Times in a telephone interview that "I would expect that it isn't too much of an exaggeration" to say that the former President is broke. "We won't say he's broke in the sense of you and I being broke," Mr. Butler said. "But all you have to do is look at his most recent financial statement and the payments he has had to make since then to know there is a cash problem. Certainly, his financial picture is uncertain and unclear." Mr. Butler said he thought he would be ready to discuss with Mr. Nixon in a personal meeting "in the next week or so" certain preliminary ideas about his future financial status, his assets and liabilities, although he said it may be the end of the year before his situation will be clear, if then.

Mr. Nixon has a good many financial assets, he added, but be faces the problem of what to do with his various properties." He said he did not know about prospects for Mr. Nixon to

Studies Pose Arsenic Role In Cancer 12 Million Workers

Are Exposed in U.S.

By David Burnham WASHINGTON, Aug. 30 (NYT).

High levels of cancer have been found among men who worked in factories processing inorganic arsenic, thus raising a serious new health question for the 1 1/2 million workers the government estimates are now exposed to the compound in the United States.

The finding of lung cancer and lymphatic cancer was docu-mented in studies submitted to federal health agencies by the Allied Chemical Corp. and the Dow Chemical Co.

Inorganic arsenic normally is produced during the smelting of copper and has many uses, including the control of crab grass, the preservation of wood, the control of sludge in lubricating oils and the manufacture of

Although the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health has estimated that about 1.5 million workers are exposed to varying amounts of arsenic in the United States, there is no estimate of the exposure of the general public through such means as pollnted water. A 1970 federal survey of water supplies in different parts of the country found arsenic in excess of federal limits in a small number of the 3,563 systems sampled. The water systems that were examined were in Vermont and around Net York City, Cincinnati; Charleston, W.Va.; Kansas City, Mo.; Charleston, S.C.; New Orleans; Pueblo, Colo., and San Bernardino and Riverside Counties in southern California .

Nineteen of the 27 were found to have died from cancer. The lung cancer and lymphatic cancer rates were found to be six to seven times higher than would normally be found in a similar

Airlines' New Fare-Boost Bid Based on Cartel Expectation

NEW YORK, Aug. 30 (NYT).--When international airlines agreed last weekend to seek increased fares on scheduled transatlantic jet trips Nov. 1, for the fifth time this year, their decision was root-. in the expectation that they rould soon achieve something that they were wrongly accused of doing long ago-operating a

If that expectation is realized during new negotiations scheduled for late next week, as many industry analysts believe, much of the competition that generated cheap excursion fares to Europe during the last decade, setting off an explosion in foreign travel by middle-class Americans, will be eliminated.

The new agreement, approved at Montreux, Switzerland, would increase fares by an average of 10 per cent over increases averaging 25 r :- cent that were imposed earlier this year, and would raise the costs of some excursion plans by as much as 25 per cent. The increases are virtually certain to

Some airline executives admit to private forebodings about raising rates again in the face of the worst slump in transatiantic travel since World War II. Trips by Americans to Europe appear to have declined in July by more than 20 per cent, compared with 1973, and advance bookings for ti fall are lean.

Fare, Hotels, Meals The decline is the most part to fare increases and souring prices for hotels, meals and sight-seeing abroad. But the airlines, insisting that they are trapped, contend that they must raise fares to offset higher prices for jet fuel. The airlines also concede that transatiantic travel increased largely because fares were economical enough for more middle-income persons. Now, the airlines say, this group of transatlantic traveljets which were as fast and as comfortable as those of Pan Am or Air France. They could charge less because they dld not have the expense of serving routes on a year-round basis. And most of them filled all the seats of their planes while scheduled airlines planes usually flew with "--" of the seats empty.

Rapid Expansion

The group of nonscheduled airlines expanded rapidly, starting in 1969, when airlines such es Pan Am began receiving new Boeing-747 jumbo jets and sold many of their older craft to charter lines.

Although marketing experi-ments with which the scheduled lines sought to fill the new jumbos played a role in lowering fares, it was the competition of the cut-rate charter flights that largely forced the scheduled airlines to offer cheap new excursion rates, rates they would later claim were profitless.

Pan Am and other major cheduled airlines entered the fast-growing group-travel market, offering charter flights of their own and, in effect, competing with their own scheduled flights. Between 1967 and the end of last year, the annual number of one-way transatlantic air trav-elers more than doubled, to 11 million, largely as a result of the price war between scheduled and nonscheduled lines.

Even so, there were still not enough passengers to fill the new 360-seat 747s and older, smaller planes that were still flying the North Atlantic. Last year, scheduled airlines alone crossed the Atlantic with more than five million empty seats. Now the Civil Aeronantics Board is encouraging the rival airline factions to end the freemarketplace pricing of charter flights to increase revenue. And the charter lines, not exempted from the effect of rising fuel costs and of the slump in transatiantic tourism, have expressed interest in fixing the prices of charter tickets by agreement be-

Talkathons

Winston Churchill once observed that "jaw-jaw is better than war-war." So it is. But there are times when the United States puts an intolerable strain on that simple truth. In Caracas, UN conferees have wound up 10 weeks of talks about a law of the sea with little more achievement than a decision to hold another conference in Geneva next spring and then return to Caracas for a third next summer.

At the same time, e UN world population conference has adjourned in Bucharest with the feeble conclusion that countries should try to reduce their birth rates by 1985. If, as sovereign nations, they happen to think they ought to. Much of its time was spent on propagandistic irrelevancies.

Both conferences are severe diseppointments. No one could reasonably have expected instant treaties and programs of action to make the resources of the ocean bed the "common beritage of mankind" or somehow to arrest an insanely spiraling population rate that can produce world catastrophes before the end of the century. People did have e right to expect these crucial problems to be discussed with a sense of urgency by men big enough and bold enough to rise, if need be, above the confines of national sovereignty and ideological

The urgency is unmistakable, and the problems themselves are interrelated. Population, already one of the chief causes of the world's social ills-hunger, unemployment and destruction of the environmentwill at the present rate double in 30 years or be prevented from doing so only by starvation, disease and war.

The oceans, which could be a new and saving source of proteins, minerals and fnel, for poor and rich nations alike, will be reserved instead for perpetuation of the same maldistribution, the same struggles of economic nationalism, that have torn the world apart for centuries. These struggles will be eased only when the "common heritage" concept is adopted in good faith.

The most that happened at Caracas, it appears, was that thousands of diplomats and their experts, turning out documents running to hundreds of thousands of pages, managed to define "where they are farthest apart." In both Caracas and Bucharest, a few mavericks willing to risk repudiation by the governments might have alerted the world to its danger, even if they couldn't hope to distract the bulk of their colleagues from a boundless compulsion to jaw-jaw.

In the matter of Mr. Nixon's future liability to prosecution, conviction and perhaps even imprisonment for criminal activity, it took about four questions at President Ford's press conference before the right question was asked. The question was whether Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski "can in good conscience pursue cases against former top Nixon aides as long as there is the possibility that the former president may not also be pursued in the courts?" The President had the right answer: The special prosecutor, he replied, "has an obligation to take whatever action he sees fit in conformity with his oeth of office, and thet should include any and all individuals."

It seems to us that this is all the President ought to be saying about this matter until Mr. Jaworski has had an opportunity to make up his mind about whether to proceed against Mr. Nixon. And our only regret is that this wazn't all that the President had to say. En route to what seems to us to be a sound and prudent position, he was drawn into a discussion of the manner in which he might deal with the case of Mr. Nixon, if it ever comes to him. In the process, he identified himself with some incautious comments by his vice-presidential nominee, Mr. Rockefeller, which were in turn no more than echoing of some even more misguided observations by Senate Minority Leader High Scott. The inevitable result was to give rise to speculation about en eventual presidential pardon for Mr. Nixon-in response to a presumed public sentiment that the former president has "suffered enough"hefore there has been any decision to prosecute Mr. Nixon and while the special prosecutor is still weighing his obligations under the law.

It is true that Mr. Ford never quite said he was considering a pardon-merely that this was his option and his right. But when asked if he agreed with Mr. Rockefeller that "President Nixon should have immunity from prosecution," he replied that "the expression made by Mr. Rockefeller, I think, coincides with the general view and the point of view of the American people." Now Mr. Rockefeller's expression, as it happens, consisted largely of a statement associating himself with earlier remarks by Sen. Scott with respect to possible prosecution of Mr. Nixon that 'hanging is enough without drawing and quartering" Sen. Scott, it should be noted, had gone on to say that "in my judgment, Dick Nixon could not get a fair triaiand especially not in the District of Columbia." Was Mr Rockefeller also accepting that view when he praised Sen. Scott for a "very good statement (that) reflected the mood and spirit of Congress"? More to the point was the President embracing all of that when he "subscribed" to Mr. Rockefeller's "point of view."

We would like to think not. But we would add that, on this difficult and delicate issue, it might be wiser in the future for Mr. Ford to speak for himself. For when you put together everything that the President said in response to the questions on this subject at his first press conference. it adds up to something more than a simple affirmation of the special prosecutor's obligation to abide by his oath of office. In fact, it suggests a pre-disposition on his part to resolve a potential criminal proceeding against Mr. Nixon on the basis of his reading of public opinion or congressional sentiment before the matter has even begun to be dealt with by orderly judicial process-and before a related criminal proceeding, the Watergate cover-up case, in which Mr. Nixon has been named as an unindicted co-conspirator, has even gone to triel.

Giscard's Summit

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's proposal of a European summit is not exactly a diplomatic hombshell. The heads of state and of government of the Community agreed at their last meeting, in Copenhagen in December, that they should meet more often in future. The idea of another meeting was canvassed during the first half of this year, when West Germany was in the chair, but never came to anything because of the political upheavals in Britain, France and West Germany. It was therefore generally accepted that the new French President would take advantage of France's chairmanship to invite his coileagues to Paris and attempt to get the Community off to a fresh start efter all the trials of the past year.

This was egreed in principle with the West German government when Mr Giscard d'Estaing was in Bonn early in July, and Mr. Wilson is not thought to have raised any objection when he visited Paris 10 days later. Both British and West Germans insisted, however, that such a meeting must be carefully prepared and yield concrete results. It would do more harm than good if the new leaders of the Community could not improve on the sorry spectacle provided by the old ones in the middle of the energy crisis last December.

The Caracas Conference

The most encouraging result to emerge from the . . . conference that ended Thursday after ten weeks . . . is the agreement to meet again in Geneva in just over six months' time. In practical terms, it achieved little else and only continued goodwill and hard work on all sides will enable an agreement to be established next year. If it is not, there is a widespreed belief that a number of countries will go ahead unileterally with sweeping claims to the sea and its resources. The situation would then amount to one of anarchy with disputes and conflicts at see as frequent as they have been

There is thus now a time limit on the negotiations which may help to concentrate the mind. . . If Caracas dld nothing else, it demonstrated a will to go on trying. It ought also to have produced a moral obligation on individual states not to go ahead with measures of their own while the diplomatic attempts to find an agreement con-

London: Can Democracy Survive Inflation?

By James Reston

LONDON-It seems an extreme and even silly question to be asked in Britain, of all places, bot actually it is being osked and discussed here by serious men and women: Can democracy long survive the present rate of inflation?

The answer in many other countries is that it cannot, bot the bet bere is that in Britain it can and will. Nevertheless, the fact that this nation of amiable grumblers is even talking about the possibility of undemocratic means of controlling inflation. forming private vigliante armies to break strikes and keep essential services going is, as the British say, e little odd.

The inflation rate in Britain is now about 20 per cent a year, Un-employment rose in July by 89,526, the largest monthly increase 1948, and now stands et over 650.000. In the confusion of e iltery stock market, the prices of securities fell in August to the lowest point in 16 years, and more important, back in the kitchen, people were running out of sugar for their tea.

Meanwhile, wages were chasing prices up the scale. Basic weekly wages rose at e record rate in July and were up over 18 per cent from a year ago, but consumer prices were up 20 per ceot. Thus the ominous question: How long can this go on without crippling the economy, pricing British goods out of the world market, producing industrial strikes and class tension, and forcing government action to limit the traditional liberties of the British people?

Serious, Not Critical

The answer one gets from cabinet members now available in London is that the situation is serious but not ell that critical. The Chancellor of the Exchequer. Denis Healey, speaks of bringing inflation down to about 12 per cent by the end of next year. but most other projections are more pessimistic The London Budness School's latest forecast, by James Ball and Terry Burns, is that, in the absence of some new and effective prices and wages policy, consumer prices will rise another 20 per cept in 1975 and unemployment will reach a million by the winter of 1975-76.

Anything close to another 20 per cent rise in prices and e mil-lion unemployed in the winter of 1975-76 would, officials here agree, create an acute crisis, and compei any government in power to introduce compulsory controls. which the unions unanimously SECORGO

"We are like mountain climbers walking along a narrow ledge in a high wind," one cabinet member observed privately here the other day. "We may ma'e it and we may not."

Bernard Levin, surveying in the ed in Britain over the last eight years, observes thet what was unthinkable here eight years ago is now not only a part of the thought, but of the delly life of political complexion, he observed. certainly no democratic government, can now rule without the cooperation of the unions, nor ss legislation that can be carried out against the will of the Britain has now accepted this. as it accepts what is a civil war Ulster, as a normal condition of life. "I suppose," Levin said, that that is, in essence, the fundamental change that has taken place in Britain." He defined the change as follows:

"From our collapsing postal and telephone system to our ever-in-creasing inflation . . . from frequent traffic jams to permanent traffic jams, from political and industrial violence as an exceptional and newsworthy occurrence to the same things as a lurid and apparently permanent backdrop to our lives.

'From-this above all-absolute certainty that whatever else died or changed, our democratic institutions would remain basically the same whatever happened, to a state of affairs in which talk of dictatorships of the right or the left is the common parlance of the day. That is the kind of journey on which Britain has gone in the last eight years. . . ."

This is more extreme than anything else this reporter has heard in Britain, but the mood is solemn.

and the chief secretary to the Treasury, Joel Barnett, felt obliged to announce the other day that the greatest danger facing the country was panic. The economic situation, be said, is serious but not "catastrophic."

The government likewise has felt obliged to take note of two vigilante groups now organizing to deal with political and industrial chaos if it comes. Gen. Sir Walter Walker, former NATO commander in chief in Northern Europe, stated the objective of both organizations: "We are not going to sit and watch these political bully boys, these trade-union Communists and fascists and those wretched young anarchists bring Britain to her knees," he told the Daily Telegraph. The politicians heven't got the fire in their bellies to tackle the problem. So it is up to us, the people of this land . . to prepare for action ourselves. The British Defense Minister.

Roy Mason, described this as "Blimpish bull" and condemned vigilante organizations for "anti-democratic endeavors to exert their extreme views beyond and outside our recognized democratic and parliamentary procedures." and it is against all this extreme rhetoric and alarming economic arithmetic that the British will go to the polls in the second national election in seven question will be who can control the infletion, but under the surface, who can get cooperation of the unions to avoid industrial chaos. British democracy is probably not et stake in this conflict over how to control inflation, but for the moment nobody is quite sure, and that is something new in this troubled island.

In the end, the British people will decide, and for the mome they are a little like a family that has been off on e vacation they couldn't afford. They look and feel better, but the bills are beginning to come in, the house is in a bit of a mess, and the same old problems seem more ominous than before they went away.

Awakening Watchdogs in Congress

By Walter Pincus

WASHINGTON-The Watergate scandals were not just the result of the wrongdoings of e president, his top sides and a bandful of appointed executive branch officials. Abuses prolifereted in part because of the failure of Congress to exercise the aggressive oversight function. intended to keep in balance these two naturally conflicting governmental branches. Thus, the departure of Richard Nixon and his top aides does not guarantee that congressional committees will now reassert their watchdog roles. Nor is there yet any real sign that committees which have been misled in the past will enforce a new demand for truthful testimony. A test of whether Congress wants new standards of honesty from those called before it may be found in the case of the Senate Foreign Reletions Committee end Ruth Farkas, presently the U.S. ambassador to Luxembourg. On March 13, 1973-before the Watergate cover-up collapsed-Mrs. Farkas, during her confirmation hearing before the committee, testified that e $300,000 contribution to the Nixon reelection committee, made in the winter of 1972-73, "had substantially nothing to do with whether I was getting an ambassadorship or not . . . The senators accepted the Parkas-Wyman story and epproved her nomination. Kalmbach testified that he was called in July or August. 1971, by White House aide Peter dled Mr. Nixon's ambassadorial patronage. A luncheon thereafter was arranged, Kalmbach testified, and took place in August, 1971, at the Regency Hotel in New York.

At that time, again according to Kalmbach, Mrs. Farkas said words to the effect that "you know well, I am interested in Europe, I think, and isn't $250,000 an awful lot of money for Costa Rica?" That lunch was the last Kalmbach saw of Mrs. Farkas, although he listed her as a pro-

He confirmed that he had talked to Mr. Fianigan and had arranged the August, 1971, Farkas lunch-eon with Kalmbach, He also acknowledged he knew an ambassadorship and a contribution were being considered-in fact, he wrote that he was first introduced to Mrs. Farkas by a wealthy New Hampshire friend who from the beginning ed she might make e good ambassador and had a good deal of money to contribute. The congressman steadfastly maintained in his new letter, however, that no ambassadorial post was being sold, noting that Mrs. Farkas did not receive the Costa Rican post.

Committee's Course

It may seem like a small thing, but it involves the integrity of the committee and perhaps of the confirmation process which relies on witnesses being open in responding to questions. Bringing Ambassador Farkos back from Luxembourg to be questioned about her earlier testimony may seem harsh perhaps even petty. But if Kalmbach's version of things stands up, the committee could recommend at the least that Mrs. Farkas's resignation, which should have been offered pro forms to the new President along with those of other ambassadors, be accepted.

The consideration of a delay is a matter of domestic politics and hinges on an evaluation by the White House of how seriously a reversal of Cuban policy would affect the prospects of Republican congressional candidates. On the o'her hand, there is concern over the United States isolating itself in the hemisphere on the Cuban

Mr. Rabasa has been one of the chief figures in the initiative to end Cuba's formal isolation under a containment policy sustained by Presidents Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon.

After a series of consultations among the Latin American ministers in February, in which Mr. Elssinger participated, Mr. Rabasa went to see Mr. Castro in Havana and, according to his own account, asked the Cuban Premier "point blank whether he would come back into the OAS." responded to an appeal by the chief Cypriot delegate, Zenon Rossides, for belp for the refugees. Both Mr. Rossides and Turkish Ambassador Osman Olcay termed the resolution insdequate. The Cyprict urged that something be done about what he called new Turkish aggression on the island. The Turk said: "The problem of displaced persons can be settled only within the framework of a political settlement."

Soviet Ambassador Jacob Malik, the council president, who had been expected to abstain, cast his vote for the resolution.

Pushes Soviet Plan

He, too, said that it was inadequate, Mr. Malik called for acceptance of the Soviet proposal for an international conference on the Cyprus problem, e parley that would be attended by Cyprus, Greece, Turkey and all 15 members of the Security Council, The Soviet representative again denounced "the narrow circles of NATO" for allegedly trying to curve up Cyprus. He demanded the total withdrawa of foreign troops from the island and asserted that the sovereignty guarantees of the British-Greek-Turkish agreement which gave Cyprus independence in 1960 had proved

He said that the Geneva dec-laration of Britain, Greece end Turkey was inconsistent with the council's first resolution on the current Cyprus crisis. The "main participant" in the 1960 guarantee system, Britain, also rejected that council decision, he said, as was indicated by the present proposal of the British delegate. No Bid on Troops

He was apparently referring to the fact that today's resolution did not call for the withdrawal of foreign troops.

His face flushed with anger, British Ambassador Ivor Richard rejoined that the Soviet delegate had used his position as council president to attack Britain in a statement that was irrelevant, tunhelpful and mischievous.

"Until you took the floor, we had a debate which was addressing itself to the realities of the situation," he told Mr. Malik, Referring to a remark by the Soviet delegate that the nonaligned states supported the Soviet proposal for an international conference, Mr. Richard said: "You dn not speak for the nonaligned nations. With respect, you are one of the most aligned nations in this whole organization."
U.S. Ambassador John Scali

also rejected the Soviet proposal for an international conference and Mr. Malik's "vague charges of mysterious machinations by unidentified members of NATO." These stories might amuse or titillate the readers of summertime fiction on the beaches of the Crimea, Mr. Scali said, but such fairy-tales would not help solve the Cyprus problem.

Eventually, according to Israeli spokesmen, the Russians said that their "work" in the immediate area was completed and they were Disputed Sovereignty

The incidents occurred in the Gulf of Suez off the southern Sinai Peninsula, which was occupied by Israel in the 1967 war. Some observers here thought the Soviet action was designed to demonstrate Russia's nonrecognition of Israel's right to sovereignty over those waters.

The 600-ton minesweepers, ostensibly engaged in clearing operations around the Suez Canal, outweigh and outgon the six-men Hornet-class Israeli patrol boats. "We do not know whether the action was coordinated with Egypt," the Tel Aviv newspaper Al Hamishmar said. "While Israel certainly would not want a confrontation with the U.S.S.R., it cannot for long remain indifferent to such incidents of trespassing and provocation."

Details of the incident were sent to the Israeli Embassy in Washington with instructions that the deficits.

Defense Minister Shimon Peres said today that Soviet minesweeping in the gulf would be co-ordinated with Israel in the future. In a television interview, he said that, "at this functure, the minesweeping incident can be considered over."

Mr. Peres said the United Nations Emergency Force polic-ing the cease-fire had handed Israel a request from the Egyptians to "coordinate the times and locations for minesweeping in the Gulf of Suez."

No Date Is Indicated For Resuming Powers

LA CORUNA, Spain, Aug. 30 (UPI) — Generalisatino Francisco Franco, Si, has made a "physical recovery" from a circulatory allment which forced him to dele gate his powers temporarily, the acting chief of state, Prince Juan Carlos de Berbon, said today.

The 36-year-old luthoe, named to become king, after Gen. Franco's death or retirement. mentioned Gen. Franco's improv ing health in an address to the Cabinet which met at Gen. Franco's summer retreat hate

Juan Carlos said: "I have been able these days to see the evidence of the physical recovery of the Generalistico. If caused satisfaction to all of us."

Gen. Franco delegated him powers to the prime sir weaks ago while he was hospitalised in Madrid with thrombophlebitis, an inflammation of the veins causing clotting of the blood. He also suffered from gastric difficulties and a speech impair-

Resumption of Powers

Asked to elaborate on Prince Juan Carlos's statement, Information Minister Pio Cabanillas later told a news conference that he did not know if and when Gen. Franco would take back his powers as chief of state. He indicated that this was a matter which could be decided only at the highest level.

It was the second time that Prince Juan Carlos had presided a cabinet meeting since Cen. Franco made him acting chief of

Viewpoint Contested

The plan skirts the fact that many demographers think the present global population growth rate threatens world resources and development of the less advanced nations, a viewpoint that is hotly contested by some

It leaves the formulation of population policies to individual nations, recognizing that some may want to augment rather than curb population growth. However, it brings up an el-ement of international responsi-bility:

"The effect of national action or inaction in the fields of population may in certain circumstances extend beyond national boundaries.

Such international implications are particularly evider with regard to aspects of mo bidity, population concentration and international migration, h may also apply to other aspec of population concern."

Technical Aid

The declaration says interne tional cooperation should pl "a supportive role" in the for of direct technical and financi assistance in addition to "econor development assistance" and such other ways as monitori and information sharing.

"Recognizing that per capi use of world resources is muchigher in the more developed the in the developing countries," the plan says "the developed cour tries are urged to adopt appropriate policies in population, cor sumption and investment, bearing in mind the need for fundamen improvement in international
